What makes Science and Global Change (SGC) such a great program is that you learn about an issue that will have a significant impact on your future. As our great professors like to say: “Global change isn’t an environmental issue, it is a matter of national security.” In SGC you will find yourself going on field trips and working on group projects, so not only will learn about the importance of global change, but you will have fun doing it! As an SGC veteran, I highly suggest going into SGC as a scholars program. You will learn great stuff, meet great people, and maybe even play some great softball at the Scholars picnic!
